Hi ...,

...

Here are my comments:

I heard on the radio & or TV news the publicity concerning whether the government should regulate the mobile phone industry in NZ and that submissions for this process closed sometime this month.

I could see no obvious place where the public could make such submissions in support of the regulation.

Also I am concerned that the Commerce Commission had to be given to bites of the apple, so as to speak, and be prompted by the Minister Stephen Joyce and back-track on there original finding of not regulating the industry. You just have to take a look at the rest of the Western World to see that regulation is needed - of course an industry/business will try and make as much money as it can, even if it is seen as unfair & out of kilter with the rest of the World. Of course regulation is needed & shame on the damn Commerce Commission for not investigating and addressing the situation adequately the first time round.

Gary Stevens.
